In America's Broken Promise, Dr. Eduardo Marti shows how community colleges have multiple, difficult, and often competing missions, particularly surrounding access and achievement rates. He reminds us that a very high percentage of students entering the community college "open door" are neither college ready nor intent upon graduation.

In "America's Broken Promise: Bridging the Community College Achievement Gap," Eduardo Marti, former president of Queensborough Community College in New York, suggests new ways community colleges, which play a crucial role in American higher education, can and must meet the complex, varied needs of their students. Community colleges are the only postsecondary institutions that promise to ...

America's Promise Alliance is the driving force behind a nationwide movement to improve the lives and futures of America's youth. By bringing together hundreds of national nonprofits, businesses, community and civic leaders, educators, citizens, and young people, the Alliance does what no single organization can do on its own: catalyze action on a scale that reaches millions of young people.
