"Rhaegar was the last dragon," he told her. He warmed translucent hands over a glowing brazier where stone eggs smouldered red as coals. One moment he was there and the next he was fading, his flesh colorless, less substantial than the wind. "The last dragon," he whispered, thin as a wisp, and was gone. She felt the dark behind her, and the red ...

The theory that makes the most sense is that these are eggs from the Targaryen family stash, either ones involved in the Summerhall fire and/or ones Aerys mined on Dragonstone. The World book mentions that some of the eggs Aerys found had petrified...
