'Game of Thrones' 101: Explaining the Tyrion Targaryen Fan Theory. It's Aerys Targaryen. Some believe that on the wedding night of Tywin and Joanna Lannister, the power-drunk Aerys used his status as king to claim first bedding rights to Joanna. Through either seduction or blackmail, he kept up a secret relationship with Joanna for years, which eventually led to Tyrion's birth.

Even George R.R. Martin would approve of this one. It might as well be the Game of Thrones theory to end all Game of Thrones theories. It takes up a massive three Reddit posts and tens of thousands of words with dozens of sections and addresses a number of the show's biggest points. If you have the time, and are a big enough nerd,...

Very simply, Tyrion could be a Targaryen — and, technically, Daenerys Targaryen's half-brother (and Jon Snow's cousin, too). The "Mad King," Dany's dad, was fixated on Joanna Lannister, Tyrion's mother. There have been obscure hints in the books that the Mad King may have acted on his lustful ambitions —...

HBO Tyrion Targaryen. The idea here is that the Mad King Aerys raped Joanna Lannister (in the books it's said that he had a thing for her) and that's where Tyrion came from. So Tywin's total hatred for the dude has deeper motivations than just that Joanna died giving birth to him or that he's a dwarf.

Tyrion Lannister is a Targaryen. Tyrion Lannister is also believed to be one of the prophesied heads of the dragon along with Dany and Jon. It comes from the theory that mad King Aerys Targaryen had an affair with Tywin Lannister's wife, Joanna, the mother of Tyrion, which might explain why Tywin hated him so much.
